Grandma had been so proud of her parlor lamp . . .

When she died, her children could not bear the thought of getting rid of it. That didn't seem right—so it was saved.

After all, it was a wonderful good looking lamp. Still, the lamp burned kerosene, and you know what that meant.

But Grandma's lamp was saved by GYRO CONVERTER and now has a long and brilliant career ahead of it. For—believe it or not—that lamp was changed from oil to electric in one-half minute.

Now we are as proud of the lamp as grandma was

The above story has been repeated hundreds of times by those who have used GYRO CONVERTERS. Electrifying other type lamps can be just as easy with the many style Converters shown in our catalog.

Our stockroom is a veritable treasure-house for those who wish to build or convert lamps. Here are generous supplies — shelf after shelf—of all the items needed. Dome and ball shades, spider shade holders, chimneys and holders, prisms, bases, sockets, vase caps—everything to make your work in creating beautiful lamps delightfully easy—all are as near as your nearest mail box.

Giving old-fashioned lamps new usefulness and charm is so easy and inexpensive that you will consider your purchase of Converters a most fortunate investment.

Our new TWO-LITE CONVERTERS for flat-wick lamps, lighting both the top and bowl alternately or together, never before obtainable, and reducing hours of intricate wiring to ½ minute can be had for only $3.30.

If you have never had our catalog, send 10¢ for 44 pages of all lamp parts in catalog No. 9.

Godey's Fashion Print 1842

Godey's - "Vogue" of Yesteryear

Part I — I Prowl

by RUTH GIST PICKENS

Godey's Prints — Godey's Lady's Books. What familiar terms to those interested in decorating and designing today. But, how many realize from whence stemmed these prints, for what purposes, and from what type of publication. For a clearer insight of "Godey's" in general, the author will, in the following series of six sketches, review Vol. XXIV and Vol. XXV the frontispieces of which bear the following masthead: "Godey's Lady's Book and Ladies' American Magazine from January to December 1842—Edited by Mrs. Sarah J. Hale, Mrs. Lydia H. Sigourney, Morton M'Michael, and Louis A. Godey. Regular Contributors, Miss C. M. Sedgwich, Miss E. Leslie, and N. P. Willis. Published in Philadelphia: Louis A. Godey, Publishers Hall, 101 Chestnut St." Editor.

Foreword by the author: The editor of The Godey's Lady's Book complains in this manner about her magazine being copied: "If the fashion could be driven from the Lady's Book there would be some dozen in the field: but it is well known to those engaged in this business, that as long as the coloured fashion plate appears in the book (no other being considered authority) there is no chance for any other publication. Look at the attempts that have been made in every quarter. Copying the form of our Book and our name. In Jan. we altered our page, put figured rules around it cast expressly for the work, and now every magazine we receive has pages of the same kind. Will paper fold in no other form than that of the Book? no other colour for cover, than that used in the Book? Gentlemen, do strike out something new, and we will give you due credit."

From the above, it is apparent that some prints were published in the early days, before the copyright law was strengthened, with the Lady's Book name on them. The Godey's print even in their day must have been considered very nice. While there are not many of the very early prints in circulation, it is still possible to collect Godey's prints. A recommended method of being certain of obtaining the original is to buy the prints in the magazine in which they were published. So you can be sure the magazines are authentic, they can be identified by these names corresponding to the dates of issue: 1830 to 1839 "Lady's Book" (however, one year of the aforesaid span (1833 to 1834 was entitled "Monthly Magazine of Belle Letters and Arts"); 1840 to 1843 "The Lady's Book"; 1844 to 1848 "Godey's Lady's Book"; 1848 to 1892 "Godey's Magazine and Lady's Book". Through all these years, Louis A. Godey was one of the editors. By 1843 a number was issued entirely for women by women, Mrs. Sarah Joseph Hale, chief editor.

Now, about the fashion plates of the year 1842. None of them for this year are signed but the December plate with the name of F. Humphreys. * The colourings have every appearance of being hand done and from the way Mrs. Hale wrote of her "colourests", it seems that the writer's deduction is correct. The opinions of Mr. King at the Walter's Art Gallery, as well as Mrs. Adyelyn D. Breeskin, Director, Baltimore Museum of Art confirmed my own that each color print was hand tinted. Because of the quantities of editions of "The Lady's Book," it would seem hardly possible, but it is difficult to dispute against so much evidence.

ELIZABETH MacFALLS

501 Grant Ave., Altoona, Pa.

January 1842
Godey's Lady Book

Ghosts, witches, shades of all things weird, it is Hallowe'en and a party is in the offing at the school-house. It is time for my annual prowl in the attic, for there can be found costumes that have amused many masquerades, some long before my day.

Our attic, a long armory-like room, stretches over the top of a twenty-room house. It has four average size windows, two at each end. They are but dots in the gloom of a big cavity until one's eyes become adjusted to the half light. There are two entrances we call them the front and back stairways.

At the top of the back steps I stop to accustom my eyes to the dim light. Here is a wonderful place to get the spirit of Hallowe'en. Near by is a large box of homemade soap and a big salt barrel. Stored furniture, like geological monsters, sulk against the walls and look just about as ancient. The black, long legged fireplace pots and kettles resemble so many black cats wandering among fodder shocks. The fodder shocks are old (stacked) guns, home from the wars. Across the way the Franklin stoves crouch, black witches ready to take off on the wheels and looms of old spinning equipment. Near me huddle white clumps of three gallon earthen jars of apple butter, so many shmoos ready to caper. To complete the illusion of bats and goblins, overhead side saddles, old army saddles, modern saddles, white bags of dried apples and dried corn, dangling swords and sabers drape the rafters.

Now my eyes have become accustomed to the gloom and things that I knew were there are taking their true form as I head for two lines of big chests. Their contents are what I am seeking.

A wide quilted skirt, a bustle, some flowers and ribbons to trim the bustle, a basque, a paisley shawl, some old curls and a feathered hat — these should fix me up in style for the masquerade. Here in the midst of old gowns, uniforms and shawls is a black lump, a book. It is, Godey's Lady's Book", for the year 1842.

I go to the nearest window and sit on a little box. Here is a book that will tell me what my great-grandmother thought about and wore.

"Editor's Table" (editorial page) Jan. 1842. "The 'knell of the departed year' has hardly ceased sounding, yet we come to join in the expression of hope and enjoyment which the morning of the New Year is always expected to inspire."

"A custom obtains in the city of New York—and we believe to a considerable extent through the state—which we wish were adopted universally. In that city business is suspended on New Year's day, and the gentlemen make calls on all the families with which they wish to associate during the year. The ladies, of course, must be at home and receive their friends."

"What benefits might be effected on this day, by a word of encouragement, of advice or warning, as the case might require? If uttered in a kind

Collecting Pattern Glass

A Word To The Wise - - -

PART VII OF A 12-PART ARTICLE

by RUTH WEBB LEE

BAKEWELL, Pears & Company of Pittsburgh, Pa. produced during the 1860's a pattern known today simply as Ribbon. Some dealers and collectors refer to it as "early Ribbon", to differentiate it from later varieties. This glass has one frosted panel alternating with a clear indented panel.

Among the reproduction put out by one glass company is a copy of the Ribbon goblet. The new one is taller and slightly heavier than the original. The frosted panel on the Ribbon pattern was accomplished by sandblasting, a process which antedated the use of acid as a method of applying a frosted finish. "White acid", as the glassmakers termed it, leaves a soft, rose-petal surface while sandblasting leaves the surface smooth but with a definitely firm, coarser feel to it. I don't know how the present-day sandblasting is effected but the panels on the new Ribbon goblet are harsh and rough to the touch, and some of the panels show faintly diagonal lines, as if scratched. Moreover, the frosting is whiter on the new goblet, as is usually the case.

Weighing glass, as a method of detecting frauds, may offer distinct possibilities, since the new is invariably heavier.

Today a collector sent me a Westward-Ho wine for examination. He had purchased three of them through the mail from a Western dealer for fifty dollars. The one he sent me was new and from his letter, I judge the other two were exact mates. A friend who visited the factory in Pennsylvania where this wine was made said he saw a bushel basket full of them and he could have bought all he wanted at fifty cents each. Multiply this collector's experience by a few thousand more and then maybe it will be brought home to the glass clubs that there won't be any more glass clubs one of these days, if they do not get together and at least try some concerted action against perpetration of fraud. It requires concerted action. What little I have accomplished in attempting to combat this racket is not nearly enough and I cannot hope to end it singlehanded.

New Three-Face lamps are on the market but I have not seen one so far.

In glancing over some of the advertisements of "glass wanted", I wonder why so many collect Moon and Star, when nearly everything in it is being reproduced. Some years ago I wrote up the new footed sauce dishes, egg cups and goblets. This winter in the South I saw many new covered compotes in blue-opalescent, never made originally. I also issued a warning long ago about the miniature lamps, which were never made in the original sets. These little lamps are made up from the new egg cup molds. Lately I learned of other reproductions in this pattern, in which a dealer apparently had an unlimited quantity! In fact, he is really wholesaling it! A happy "out" for such dealers is the notation, "Returnable prepaid if not up to expectations." Listed were 6 flared champagnes at $5.00 each, 7 goblets at $5.00 each, 7 footed sauce dishes at $3.00 each, 5 footed tumblers at $3.00 each, 5 egg cups at $3.00 each, 1 waste bowl at $5.00, four 7" berry bowls at $5.00 each, 1 creamer, twisted handle, $50.00 (water pitcher, I assume, as the woods are suddenly full of them) and six 4" and six 4½" flat sauce dishes at $5.00.

Noticeable are the odd numbers, seven of many items, five of others. It seems apparent to anyone of experience, who knows full well that such items as egg cups, champagnes and goblets were rarities twelve years ago, that an entire new set of Moon and Star has been gradually flooding the market over a period of the past few years. One way of dampening the enthusiasm of the manufacturers of these fakes is to boycott the pattern. Stop buying it right now and let their wares stand on their shelves or go into gift shops and department stores where they belong, properly marked. Don't buy Ivy in Snow, Lion, Westward-Ho and Moon and Star unless you are expert enough to know what you are buying. I am not setting myself up as an arbiter of good taste or trying to hold up the high prices of old glass but I want to help the collector or dealer who pays $50.00 for three new Westward-Ho wines — value $1.50.

If the high prices asked for some of the most popular patterns deter you from collecting, why not examine some of the lesser known designs in which the cost is moderate? Moreover, it seems to me a combination of patterns might not only be interesting but also effective. Clear Diagonal Band goblets and sauce dishes could be combined with fruit or flower patterns. For instance, a Stippled Cherry bowl for the center of the table, perhaps flanked by two Stippled Cherry spoonholders, for flowers. It is interesting to note how spoonholders have increased in price during the past few years, since collectors have learned to appreciate their utilitarian value for short-stemmed flowers. There are no end of fascinating little match holders and salts which also lend attraction to a table-setting.

Diagonal Band and Fan is to be highly recommended to new collectors. Values all the way through are moderate and there are plates which are inexpensive and in just the right sizes for practical use.

Other attractive patterns which have been overlooked are "Scroll" (Plate 140, Early American Pressed Glass) "Scroll with Flowers" and "Diagonal Band"—all shown on the same page. Personally, I would choose any one of these three designs in preference to Moon and Star. This latter pattern, which came out in 1888, was finally discontinued by the makers because of its excessive weight. Take a good look again at the patterns on Plate 140 and then enjoy your collecting days without any fears about reproductions, as not an item in any of those suggested has been copied.

Collections and Collectors

by Katherine J. Justh Baross

THE antique Spinning Wheel collection at the museum-house in Northampton, Mass., are not silent museal pieces.

The inhabitants of this town, fifty-thousand strong, designate Northampton to the preservation of Americana. By their activities Colonial and Early American antiques from the New England area find their way to an olden edifice sheltering these collections.

Among the authentic and time-mellowed pieces Spinning Wheels of old are lined up in the museal rooms with their skeiners and ladder-rack holding the bobbins wound on the premises.

Young town-folk, women with deft fingers work raw flax into form, and the antique Spinning Wheels whirl again. The flax thread is wound onto the skeiner, from which the bobbins are filled with the help of an age-old contraption having the smaller and larger disk driven by hand. The bobbins with the many colored flaxes are stored on the ladder-rack where they await the final operation, weaving.

Gifted town women with adroit fingers work with the noisy antique handlooms, using the same patterns that had descended from the Pilgrims. These looms, worn smooth from much use, perhaps are the very same with which the antique coverlets and century-old table-cloth were woven, now on display at this superb permanent Americana exhibit.

CORN FIGURINES

Small replica of an ear of corn, about two to five inches in size, are collected by Mrs. Judy Mead of Los Angeles. Corn figurines of porcelain, glass, ivory and wood are in this collection. One specimen is a small hand holding a corn vase.

BUTTON MUSEUM

A modern especially designed museum holds the rare button collection of the Waterbury Companies which has made buttons since 1812. Types and examples of buttons which are nowhere else to be seen are displayed in this exhibit, reported to be the finest in existence.

Located at the third floor of the South Main street plant of this Company in Waterbury, Connecticut, the button museum was conceived by the late Warren F. Kaynor, President of the Waterbury Company. Within the past four years Mrs. Florence Elizabeth Gilpatric, able curator has assembled, mounted and catalogued the group.

Buttons the world over as well as antique buttons collected throughout New England may be seen. The pewter button with a foliated "I" for Infantry inscribed in the center, a model used on uniforms of the war of 1812, is a type made by the Company under government contract. There are glass Jenny Lind buttons, also made by the Company and fashioned by Henry Abbott.

A set of colourful seven hat buttons from China, Kiang Province, 1864, denotes steps in mandarin society, and are made of rose quartz, lapiis lazuli, crystal, coral, nacre, worked gold, and plain gold.

Portrait buttons came from France, England, including ivory miniatures painted in India, 1830. There are Early American buttons of heads in fine embroidery stitches.

VICTORIAN HOME

When the old fashioned yet efficient Burglar Alarm System, which was used about forty years ago in the old Security and First National Bank Building in Long Beach, California, was bought from the bank by Mr. Craig Huber two years ago, he installed it into the room of his small son, Craig Jr., then not one year old.

With this buy Mr. Huber put the finishing touch in style to the room, entirely Victorian in walnut. This cozy room had an old Victorian rocker to rock the baby to sleep with the old Burglar Alarm watching his slumber.

In daytime the baby enjoyed his Victorian antique play-chair, which if the lever was pushed, went down gently to the floor with the baby, the legs folding up was converting it to a hobby-horse. Another lever movement transformed it into a cart with wheels.

A small Victorian roll top desk with two drawers held the baby's gadget. To keep him smiling when he felt like crying he had an antique musical beerstein, or rather "milk-stein", which, when picked up played two tunes, the Star Spangled Banner and Columbia.

The Hubers started married life with modern furniture, but too soon found it uncomfortable, blank, and meaningless. Although the two of them had been reared in separate states, he in Iowa, she in Illinois, they had both grown to adulthood in Victorian-furnished homes. It was much easier to discard the modern, set by set, until their entire furnishings were exchanged into elegant Victorian, than to by-pass their early environments. Their three bedrooms have original Victorian accessories, the walnut and marble dining room has authentic linen, tableware, porcelain of the times. In their attractive living room is a finely carved eight foot high melodious organ, and vitrines containing Victorian figurines and curio.

HISTORICAL NEWSPAPERS

A rare and invaluable collection of Historical Newspapers was assembled by Daniel J. Kelly, Jr., of South Bend, Indiana. The catalogue of the material he had collected for more than twenty-five years is in four volumes, and reflects the history of the times as well as that of news-publishing.

Forerunners are representing by ancient clay tablets B.C., the Peking Gazette, English manuscripts, News Letters, European Pamphlets, The Spectator, London 1712.

In the D. K. Kelly collection are the London Gazette, first newspaper, and the Boston News Letter, the first American newspaper. Franklin's Penna. Gazette, Revolutionary War Newspapers.

The collection registers true Colonial and American History. The participants passed, these frail olden sheets remained to offer a cross section on everyday life interwoven with events that became history.

Collectors who attempt to find old papers of historical importance are rather few, this field seems to have been left to large libraries. Mr. Kelly knows of no other private Historical Newspaper collector and quests do I know of any other collector with a hobby similar to his.

According to my files, vintage 1948, Clarence A. Fink is a versatile collector of Historical American Newspapers.—Charles Lester Lane, of the New York Times, assembled one of the finest newspaper collections.—Edward N. Jenks of Wilton, Conn.,—Leon C. Baldwin of Fulton, N. Y.—Anthony F. Moitoret of Seattle, Washington, are all renowned collectors in the field.—Donald I. Segerstrom of Sonora, California, collects Gold Rush time newspapers only.

Charles H. Carson made a gift of his American Historical Newspaper collection five years ago, to the Virginia Military Institute, Lexington, Va., as a memorial to his grandfather, the late Lieut. Col. Robert Preston Carson of Abingdon. This collection, around 3000 newspapers, offered almost complete data on the Civil War.

Milton W. Hake of St. Louis, Mo., collected historical front pages for the past thirty-eight years, — believed to be the largest collection of its kind in the world. — Sgt. Donald L. Hopkins who was stationed at Fort Jackson, S. C., too, collects front pages and has some 4700 papers in about 40 languages from all over the world on rather contemporaneous events, with a small collection of Early American newspapers accumulated.

An odd collection of front page historical news from 1861 to 1936 or later, provided an unusual wall covering in a Rock Island, Ill., hotel. Its owner had his vulnerable collection insured.

Outstanding collector of American Journalism is Melvin L. Shapiro of Allston, Mass. — Noted collectors of Journals are Arthur G. Kennedy of Palo Alto, California; Mrs. Laird U. Park of Philadelphia, Pa., — Reinhold Frederick Gehner of New York, N. Y., — while overland Journals interest John B. Goodman of Beverly Hills, California.

Distinguished Journalism collectors are Neal Van Soy of Santa Paula, Calif.,—Louis H. Fox of New York,—Frank Luther Mott of Columbia, Mo., Carl Gazley of Chicago; — Fitz Hugh McMaster of Columbia, S. C.

Mr. Kelly mentions in his letter that his collection is without the rare Ulster County Gazette of Jan. 4, 1800, which relates in vivid detail the death of George Washington on Dec. 14, 1799, also his entombment. My files show a one piece collection of Mrs. Audrey Stratton, Los Angeles, who has the Jan. 4, 1800, Ulster County Gazette. The paper is her prized possession—an heirloom she intends to keep.

Dean of all Historical Newspaper collectors is Clarence Saunders Brigham, eminent Director of the Amer-

BUTTONS, BUTTONS - -

PART I

An Income-matched Hobby

by Dot 'n Dick Clark

ONE of the most fascinating and yet sadly neglected hobbies is that of collecting old and modern buttons. Anyone, young or old, rich or poor, has an equal chance of many happy hours with both the old and the modern buttons. There is almost an endless variety to start with—rare, semi-rare and ordinary types, all extremely interesting and affording a vast amount of research to determine their age, country of origin, why the particular design was made, what purpose it had in everyday life, the class of people who wore or used them, and ever so many interesting points to bring pleasure to the one bitten with button collecting. It is by no means a new hobby, for back in Grandma's day they had a distinct superstition in collecting what they called a charm string. When Grandma was a young lady and a young man was invited to her home, he was allowed to touch this charm string and if he touched a certain button (and scheming Grandma saw to it that he did touch that particular button) he was required to give up one that he wore, which was added to the string. Believe it or not, it was the men who wore the fancy buttons in those days, so Grandma's button string became a beautiful collection. As soon as nine hundred ninety-nine buttons had found their way on the string by this means of banditry or petty larceny, the next (and carefully selected) swain to add the thousandth button was to be her future husband. However, after the ladies began wearing buttons for adornment, the fad of charm strings died out and collecting lagged until approximately ten years ago when it was again revived. Those responsible for the revival are still a mystery, but it started on an entirely different angle and, needless to say, caught on like wildfire until today button collecting is rated as the third largest hobby in the United States. Clubs are in existance all over the country and the National Button Society was formed where yearly meetings are held and buttons exhibited for various prizes and awards. Lectures and exhibits are sponsored by state and local clubs and to date at least fifteen different and beautifully illustrated books have been published dealing solely with button collecting.

Numbered among the button collectors are men and women, young and old. Anyone who is past the age of swallowing a button can get a real thrill from their collection both from the beauty of these miniature works of art or from the historical or romantic associations which they bring to life. For the distaff side there are the enamels, porcelains, gold, silver and pewter and particularly the picture and story type. For the young fry there are the so called 'goofies'. These are modern plastic buttons that represent some fruit, vegetable, animal, insect or comic subject. For the men, young and old, there are the military and uniform buttons with their background of high adventure and valorous deeds.

Dot 'n Dick Clark, the co-authors, admit to being just an average American couple, but each with an over-average collection of interests. Until they discovered a common hobby, namely buttons, each was left on the sidelines of the other's interest. Now that they have found buttons, and buttons them, they settle by their firesides on winter evenings and dig into button lore—he, after his day as supervisor for a large business machine company; she, after her part-time duties as a doctor's assistant. It all came about like this. Dick had agreed to assist a friend in a week end house raising bee—but this was not a house, it was an old barn that was to be converted into a home. During the operation of ripping up an unwanted floor, Dick found an old wooden box that had apparently slipped down between the studs. The box contained buttons—and to Dick, such unusual buttons that he carried it home. Among those old buttons in that box was a small insect called the button bug which, in a fast double-play, bit them both. In the course of collecting and delving into new sources of obtaining buttons, duplicates began to accumulate, and when the possibilities of trading were exhausted, the next logical step was button dealership. They are now dealers in old and antique buttons and have found that their hobby is also profitable.

It is amazing how much information one can find about a button regardless of what type it is. For instance with an old military button we might recreate the picture of what regiment wore it, where they were located, the battles they fought, the honors they won and so many other exciting details that it would take several pages to record. An old railroad button might take us back to the early struggles of a road that has since gone out of existance. Police and fire department buttons each have their own story to tell. Clubs and Hotels leave some of their glamour in their old buttons. Story buttons, that is, buttons with figures which are doing something, might tell us a fairy tale, a mythological legend, a bible story or an historical event.

It is so easy to get a start in this hobby for almost every home in the country has an old button box and in this box will be found enough to get a start at absolutely no cost. Next, of course, would be the button boxes of friends and relatives, and then comes the swapping of duplicates with other collectors whose names are to be found in the various hobby magazines.

In the succeeding issues of this magazine we will endeavor to cover every type and kind of button, as well as bring you illustrations of some interesting ones.

BURSLEM - STAFFORDSHIRE

by ELSIE WALKER BUTTERWORTH

BURSLEM, an old Staffordshire town, in the section known as The Potteries, has been the center of pottery manufacture for generations and was the birthplace of Josiah Wedgwood, and the place where the Wedgwood factories were located. Many kinds of chinaware were made at Burslem, and bear the names of the makers together with the place of production. In 1683 an "earth potter" named Ralph Shawe lived here. He later moved to France.

Ralph Wood was doing business here about 1730, later to be succeeded by his son Aaron Wood. He was apprenticed to Dr. Thomas Wedgwood and made moulds for stoneware placques and dishes with raised patterns. Cream ware has been credited to him as its inventor. About 1770 Enoch Wood, a grandson, became a sculptor and made busts of prominent persons. He has been called the father of pottery. His successors were Wood & Caldwell, who continued the manufacture of the same type of ware. The marks found on china produced at this factory bear the names of Wood & Caldwell, Burslem, Staffordshire, or Wood & Caldwell; Ra Wood; R. Wood; or Ra Wood, Burslem; Aaron Wood.

In 1781 Enoch Wood made a bust of John Wesley, who frequently stayed at his house when visiting The Potteries.

In this locality many of the old gravestones were made of coarse earthenware! The name was impressed in the earthenware, but some were laid on in white slip. The names of early potters include Thomas Toft, Ralph Toft, William Sans, Ralph Tornor (Turner), Ralph Shawe, John Mitchell, Richard Shaw and later Lakin & Poole and Poole and Shrigley.

About 1857 Thomas Latham Boote and Richard Boote made white granite ware which they shipped to the American trade. They also made colored tiles which were called "Royal Patent Ironstone". Mass production had begun and it is said that one press could produce 100 dozen plates or small dishes in a day. Their trademarks were "Trade Mark — Royal Patent Ironstone T & R Boote" with the insignia of the British Lion and the Unicorn. Another mark used was a crest with a greyhound between two laurel wreaths and T & R Boote, Royal Premium Ironstone". The tiles bore the words "T & R Boote, Burslem."

This firm was succeeded by Pinder, Bourne & Hoope. Names of later potters were W. S. Kennedy, T. Mac Intyre, Edge Malkin & Co., and Malkin Edge & Co.

Doulton was also made here and the Victorian era shows many pieces of pottery and china with the marks of Doulton, Burslem.

DAVENPORT CHINA — Longport

The works of Davenport & Son date back to about 1793. In addition to stone china, they made white, cream colored and blue printed wares. The blue printed plates with open work rim are found in many fine collections. The colors were deep blues and rich reds. Cups were made with sunken panels and others bowl-shaped with gilt feet. The old Willow pattern was adapted in elaborate proportions and heavy gilt handles and gilt borders were used with it. There were also gilt rims, gilt feet and raised ornaments gilded.

John Davenport was succeeded by his son, Henry Davenport, and later by William Davenport. King George IV while Prince of Wales, visited the works in 1801 with his brother, who later became King William IV. On the accession of William to the throne, his majesty gave orders to this firm to make a service for the coronation banquet on which the mark of the crown was first used and was continued thereafter. The mark of the anchor was also used together with the name Davenport.

Obelisk by Ralph Wood; other three pieces embossed by Aaron Wood.

The Maryland Historical Society has some fine specimens of this china in its collections.

Old English necklace made from watch blocks.

ANTIQUE JEWELRY

Old Chains and Necklaces

PART V OF A 6-PART ARTICLE

by ADA W. DARLING

ONE could write an entire book on old neck ornaments, from the first crude beads of the ancients to the exquisite gold and jewelled necklaces that we can collect today. Every material has been used in their making,—coral and pearl from the sea, jewels and metals from the earth, and amber, almost as old as Time.

Necklaces have served as ecclesiastical ornaments and on many occasions have added the necessary touch of regal splendor to royal attire.

Many of the old ones, especially the larger, heavier ones, were worn close to the throat, and the hooks or fasteners were clumsy and not very secure.

Chains varied in design and weight, just as our modern ones do today. There were the gold, finely wrought ones, and the heavy, more cumbersome type, depending on the degree of skillfulness employed by the goldsmith.

Today, with a little patience, we can collect a variety of necklaces—Coral beads with carved pendants, the old flat "book" chains with their square engraved links, usually with an attractive cameo piece in the center and the dainty double link necklaces are still obtainable. Coins have even been used in jewelry and many necklaces were made from them.

One of the most unusual ones that I have found is illustrated here. The family from which I purchased it had owned it for sixty years. It had been sent to them from relatives in England and was considered a family heirloom at that time. With two exceptions, every piece is different, there are scrolls and floral designs, grotesque faces and fine conventional motifs.

Amber Necklace

Unusual flat chain necklace

Some clever jeweller put the necklace together, for the links are graduated perfectly so it lies very flat all around. It was some time before I was able to identify the pieces as blocks from the works of old English watches. These blocks are made of high quality brass, perfectly alike on both sides. My necklace has been heavily gold plated. Even the clasp has been made from the top of one block and there is a tiny face in the lower part.

Amber has an especial fascination for me and the necklace shown is the most attractive I have found. The flowers and leaves are carved from both the clear and the cloudy amber in a beautiful golden shade, the clear seems to be especially translucent. The carving is well done and there are earrings to match, with the same cloudy leaves around a clear carved drop.

Flat, finely woven chains are not too plentiful. The one I have pictured is not the ordinary type and it fits better than the ones with the ends fastened more closely together. The bar on this one is nicely engraved, with two small garnets in the center. The cross motif, used so much on the very old jewelry, is also featured on the bar. The clasp is at one end, a much more convenient closing than when placed at the back.

The 19th century brought a sharp revival of the necklace; ropes of seed pearls, gold beads and chains of all descriptions emerged from family jewel boxes where they had lain, forgotten, until a new whim of Dame Fashion brought them, once more, to light.

Around the House With Antiques

Pipe Dreams

by LILLIAN ROBERTSON

THE first pipe dream of the year in our house comes in January, when the seed catalogs start rolling in. We send for all and sundry, and to keep our consciences clear (and incidently keep the seed growers from bankruptcy) we buy their "special offers"—sixty cents worth of seeds for ten cents—dollar and a half combination, — tomatoes, squash, peach trees, cacti, daisies, water lilies, all guaranteed to grow for only fifty cents. The nurserymen are either slightly careless with the truth, or don't know me! — most likely the latter.

Year after year I have tried to beat the illustrations in the catalogs, and dream of zinnias in my garden the size of sunflowers, asters as big as dahlias, but I'm afraid I have neither the patience nor the green thumb. The kids tell me that if I would quit digging up the seeds every other day to see how they were doing, I might have some luck, but I don't pay much attention to what they say because every time there is another package in the mail box they groan. All they are required to do is turn over the soil, but the time always seems to be inopportune, — an important date with their clam digging friends — the tide is just right, or the garden fork has conveniently disappeared. Anyway, I defy anyone to grow bigger or better weeds than I, and they really look nice when mixed in a garden bouquet. The tumbleweed is especially dainty, and when dried, can be used all winter long with straw flowers in a pretty, old copper measure or Bennington milk jug.

Here is a pipe dream come true. Often wondered why there wasn't some sort of wax on the market which would take care of furniture and floors, and would last at least six months. Now there is a transparent wax product which takes longer to put on the first time, but does a beautiful job, lasts months, and preserves the wood. The directions state that the old wax must be thoroughly removed by washing with warm water and soap, then the plastic wax flowed on with a lint free cloth. Takes twenty minutes to harden from "tackiness", then about four hours to be safe before the furniture or floor is used. Gives a nice patina, needs no polishing—just a swipe of the dust cloth. Ah, me, what will they think up next to help us who belong to the "Order of the Ladies of the Dust Mop"?

(Note. I have nothing to do with this product commercially, but have used it on my floors and furniture—it does such a good job, I thought someone else would be interested)* through the dictionary and encyclopedias. When I was in the research room of the public library, I eased myself into a seat next to a high school boy who was doing his algebra homework with the aid of a friend—the friend knew all the answers, so I asked him, "What is a pipe?". He said it was either an easy exam; a tube through which gas or liquid flowed; a measure of wines; or something he borrowed from the old man and smoked when the old man wasn't around.

Another pipe dream is getting this article ready in forty-five minutes flat instead of spending hours pouring

The first pipes were fashioned of stone, metal, clay and wood — the earliest ones made by the North American Indians and known as "Elfins" or "Calumet" — (always thought the latter was a baking powder,—but it is the Pipe of Peace). Mention is made in early books of Indians wearing pipes composed of red copper, and other trinkets about their necks. (Very handy—just zip one off when you go calling and forgotten your hosts' anniversary, and say "I've had this little gadget around my neck especially for you for a long time—hope you like it.") These necklaces are still excavated once in a while in northern New York, near the Missouri River, where red soapstone and seatite are still prevalent.

To get technical — smoking pipes were made of baked clay, wood, stone or other material. The better type of Meerschaum was found in the southwest parts of Europe—Moravia, Piedmont, Crimea, and the finer qualities in Asia Minor. Meerschaum (translated from german means sea foam and is a mineral) pipe making was done extensively by the Germans. Vienna was the center of the manufactory with pipe stems made of Mahalebeb cherry—grown near Vienna; Mock orange stems grown near Hungary; jassamine sticks in Turkey. Briar root pipes have no advantage over clay in smoking qualities and taste except for looks and durability (How about the good old corn cob?)

Other materials used in pipe manufacture are ivory, glass, horn, precious metals and otherwise, cane and bamboo. Antelope horn with an upright wooden stem is used in East Africa. Laplanders make theirs of thin iron and walrus teeth; Cocoanut shells and whale bone are also popular. What one won't think up to get a smoke!—and what did they use for tobacco?—tobacco — herbs, — tea leaves, — poppy seeds,—wortroot (exuse, azma), probably anything that would burn and smell.

For the fussy ones, there is a three bowled pipe of the Kirghiz which had a different flavored tobacco in each bowl. (orange, lemon and lime?).

For the china painting artists and would-bes, there is a paint that can be put on plain china or porcelain and baked in your own kitchen oven instead of having to be taken to a kiln. The idea is — either draw your own pattern, copy from an illustration in a magazine, or trace something from your favorite heirloom dish. Place a piece of carbon paper on the dish or platter with the design on top, trace it. If you have happened to pick up a piece of satin glass or milk glass cheap because the design was partly missing, you can fill in the gaps with this special paint, or if you find a nice big bone fish or meat platter, decorate it and hang it on the wall, but use won't hurt it.

After the pattern is traced, a transparent liquid "binder" is applied with a regular artist's brush between the lines and let dry, then the colors are applied,—one color can be put over another, or blended. When the colors are dry (it doesn't take long), the dish or vase is put in the oven starting at a low heat—250 degrees and gradually raised to about four hundred degrees, according to the china. Care has to be taken about the amount of heat as some glazed articles might crackle if not watched.

My Grandmother used to make crocheted and tatted doilies. She dipped them in an alum solution, placed a tumbler upside down on the table, put the middle of the doily on the base of the tumbler bringing the sides down to the table in even folds so that there was a little fluted edge laying flat on the table. When it dried, she wove a ribbon through at the height of the glass. Turn right side up, and you have the laciest nut dish or flower holder you would want. The alum makes the doilies very stiff and can be cleaned either by light brushing, or slightly damp cloth. Baby's bootees are easily done this way too, to preserve them—Stuff them with wrapping paper instead of the tumbler to shape them.

March and April make one think of Spring and the good old country auctions in the offing. If you are looking for things "in the rough", the first auctions are the best ones to attend as many of the auctioneers want to get rid of their winter kept merchandise—make a clean sweep—and get ready for the new summer stock, and are usually glad to let things go cheap.

I'll be there!

A Typical ANTIQUES AUCTION

(A bird's eye view into an estate disposal by auction, the general items usually found, and the procedure followed. In that the writer attended this particular event in the latter part of 1948, prices shown should not be considered representative).

Doylestown, Bucks County, Pa.,
October 2, 1948

Dear Kitty:

I WISH you could have been here yesterday to go with me to the Stover sale in the Armory. It's too bad that the settlement for your house has been held up because I saw lots of things that you could use and while many things brought high prices, there were others that were reasonable and I know you could have gotten a good start on furnishing the new home.

The articles in this auction had been in the family for three to five generations, some dating back to 1770. They were the property of the two remaining sisters, Helen Stover and Rae Stover Cuthbert, both of whom are well along in years and they decided they would like to dispose of them in their lifetime rather than have them go on sale after they were gone. The family at one time owned a grist mill at Carversville, not far from here, and the furniture had been stored in the old brown stone family mansion on the hill for forty years.

I thought of you especially when some of the dining room furnishings were put up. I had in my mind's eye your lovely fireplace, with the mantel above it, at one end of your dining room in your house-to-be. On one side of the fireplace you could put the flat hoodless cradle to hold small wood and kindling (it sold for only $5) while on the other side you could have an old tea cannister, a large one about a foot high that was used in a country store, which sold for $4.50. For the mantel there was a large ironstone platter with a blue edge for $1.25, and a pair of black Staffordshire dogs at $18 for the pair.

A drop-leaf squared-corner cherry table with small round legs sold for $105. I think this was a good buy, although the top will need to be sanded down and refinished as it had been burned with a hot teapot. For chairs there was a set of eight plank half-back chairs, with rounded backs, and the original olive green paint with darker leaves, that sold for $21 each. Also sold was a lovely Windsor settee, painted green, with flat back, for $45.

A very nice piece for your dining room, and one that would tie in with the table, was a low chest of drawers of cherry for $45. This chest had four drawers, three of which were long, and the top one was divided into three small drawers. The chest had small straight legs and all the drawers had glass knobs. The big drawers you could have used to hold the table linens and put the silver in the three little ones.

Another thing that struck my fancy, and you would have loved it, too, was a tea service of solid silver which sold for $200. You couldn't get one like it today for four times that money. It consisted of a teapot, creamer, sugar basin and waste jar. It was made in 1856 and the handles were trimmed with silver cherries and etched leaves where they joined the base. This would have looked lovely on top of the cherry chest.

As a companion to the chest there was a cherry wash-stand that sold for only $16. It had straight legs, one drawer with a glass knob, and a shelf just above the floor. Plenty of room in the drawer for napkins and mats to keep hot dishes from marring the table and the lower shelf could be used to hold trays and salt and pepper shakers.

The top of this little piece would be just the place for a darling silver chest that only brought $12.50. It looked like an old box, but when you lifted the lid, you found places for knives and forks and below there was a small drawer for spoons. There was a beautiful mirror that sold for $28 that would look very well over the stand. It was a Sheraton and had a picture of Jerome Bonaparte's home in Bordentown, N. J., which was later destroyed by fire. A perfect set of white Wedgwood for a coffee service was sold for $30. It had a dozen large plates and a dozen after-dinner coffee cups and saucers with sugar and creamer.

These things I have told you about would make a start in fixing up the house and still leave furniture, china, glassware and other things to buy at later auctions or while browsing around antique shops.

Among the interesting articles sold was a walnut desk with a slant top for $380. It had three drawers, also of walnut, and each had a wooden knob. A walnut lowboy with dog feet and original brasses in the Chippendale period sold for $460 and two Chippendale walnut chairs without seats, dated 1758 when they were sent over from England as a wedding present for Mary Cartwright, sold for $195 each. A Victorian rosewood carved armchair with very good upholstery and in good condition sold for $77.50 and the side chairs brought $10 each, although they were not in as good shape.

The quilts were lovely old calicoes, glazed chintz and other old material and wonderful old patterns. Most of them sold for $12 but the one with glazed chintz on the back and a front of alternate turkey red and white squares sold for $70. The homespun and woven linen sheets with cross-stitched monograms sold for $8, hand-woven blankets for $10 and blue and white coverlets brought $12.50. A Crewel embroidered flower, worked in 1853 and framed in walnut, brought $45 and a cross-stitched one dated 1770 sold for $47.50.

A small blue lustre pitcher, in perfect condition, sold for $25. A complete bedroom set of ironstone china, decorated with roses, brought $10. A pair of small white Bisque vases, trimmed with grapes, sold for $8 and a large pair of Bristol vases, blue inside and decorated with pink roses, brought $52.50.

The doll furniture sold at good prices and had many very interesting designs, including a cupboard which sold for $16, a bed like an Empire bed with carvings (made up ready for night) for $8, and a miniature wooden sleigh with a high back for $5.

OXBOW ANTIQUE SHOP

next time we have a sale here? I watch the papers and could let you know the date of the next sale as soon as the first ad appears. They usually run the ad about three times and sometimes the first one is in the paper six weeks in advance. Most all of the sales are held in our Armory drill shed and seats are provided for those who come early. The sale usually starts at 11 o'clock, but the articles are on view early in the morning and in some cases the day before. You have the chance to look things over and decide on which items you would like to bid. The furniture is usually along each side of the building and the china, glassware, ornaments and small things are displayed on tables on either side of the selling platform. Quilts, pictures, mirrors, maps, and the like form a background for the auctioneer and his son, who "cry" many of the big sales. They use a microphone so that everybody in the big shed can hear the bids.

The one in charge of the sale remains on the platform and takes the bids on the articles that are handed up to him. As soon as the final bid is accepted, the purchased item is sent down into the audience to the successful buyer. The first things to be put up are the odd lots of all sorts of things and then come the kitchen utensils. Then china, linens and usually last, furniture. There is a half hour for lunch and a caterer is on hand to sell you sandwiches, salads and desserts. If you have completed your purchases, you visit the receiving clerk, who has been recording the items you buy, and a quick calculation brings up the total you owe. Then, arms loaded, you hurry on home to get supper and wish it was time for the next one.

Doesn't it sound like fun? And it's more so if you really are looking for things. I'll send you word when I know the date of the next one and you must come up. The best from all of us.

ROOKWOOD POTTERY

by BERNICE COOK SHIRLEY

THE cycles of esteem in which the handicrafts of our America are held is an interesting one to observe. The collector is particularly aware of this ebb and flow of interest. Rookwood pottery, which has been called "America's finest art pottery" is a good example. The methods by which this pottery was formed and decorated were expensive, and it was necessary to charge what were good prices for it at the time. Nevertheless, the early pieces found a ready market.

Later, as styles in decorating changed and the dark woodwork, heavy draperies and carpets which stretched from wall to wall in every room in the houses of the period, were replaced by painted woodwork, lighter draperies and rugs which revealed great expanses of highly waxed light oak, Rookwood along with Tiffany glass and other decorative objects of the period was relegated to top shelves and attics. Indeed some of it even found refuge in the second-hand shops.

Again, the cycle changes, and Rookwood today is a collector's item, the demand for which meets with respectful attention from dealers. Many of the pieces are highly adapted for practical purposes as well as decorative in today's modern interiors. Try placing an example of it like the one shown in the illustration on a modern cabinet of light wood. You will quickly discover how much they complement each other.

Occasionally the collector meets with this query, "What is Rookwood?" To answer such a question is a pleasure, and so we are going to assume that some of you readers have done just that.

The state of Ohio, which is one of the great pottery centers of the country, and the lovely city of Cincinnati in particular, is the home of Rookwood, and has been from its earliest beginnings. For quite a few years previous to 1880 when Maria Longwood Nichols founded Rookwood, there had been a large interest on the part of a small group of men and women in the making of decorative pottery. Mrs. Nichols had been a member of a pottery club devoted to this purpose.

When her father, Mr. Joseph Longworth, saw that her interest was genuine, he offered her the use of an abandoned building which he had recently acquired. It was near the family's country home which was named for the many rooks * which made their home there. This same name was given to the pottery. The rook has, as a consequence, been a favorite motif both on the painted and modelled pieces.

After one has had some acquaintance with this pottery, it is easy to recognize it at a glance. Imitations of it have been made but there is a great difference between them and the original. No expense was spared in making Rookwood; the commercial products could not therefore successfully compete.

Underglaze painting had been a secret no American pottery had been able to uncover until Miss M. Louise McLaughlin of Cincinnati discovered it and imparted her knowledge to others. The pottery made at Rookwood combined this highly skillful art with new glazes which were the despair of all who tried to imitate them.

Almost from the beginning, the decorators at Rookwood used native flowers, fruits and plants as design materials. The lovely single petal yellow rose, violets, red clover, holly, goldenrod, currants, cherries and many others are found again and again. And over all these, the beautiful deep crystalline glazes were spread. Many other glazes which helped to spread the fame of this pottery were developed.

The modelling tools were also used, and some of the finest pieces in our collection depend for their interest on their incised decoration. A charming example is a long necked vase in oyster white. There are four panels outlined by an incised border of conventional form. Within each panel is one of the following, a goose, dog standing and one sitting and a clump of foliage. A dark gray blue has been used for color.

The variety of forms, decorations and glazes throughout the years of this pottery's existence is so great, that the beginning collector is thankful indeed for the careful marking which was always followed. Until the year 1886, there were about a dozen different marks. These can be found in some of the reference books on American pottery. From 1886 on, the initials RP; with the R reversed, were used. For each year until 1900, a so-called flame mark was used. Thus the initials RP with six flame marks indicates the year 1892. From 1900 on, the initials with the full complement of 14 flames were used, to which was added a Roman numeral for year succeeding year. Thus the initials R.P. with fourteen flames and the Roman numeral V indicates the article was made in 1905.

The STEREOPTICAN

(A monthly editorial column embodying this magazine's policy, problems of the trade and the individuals who buy or sell antiques, with suggested solutions, and pertinent miscellany — "The Stereoptican" is a word of our own adaptation and is not to be confused with "stereoscope" or "stereopticon")

IN the line of unfinished business, we are presenting first this month, a few of the many comments received on that part of last month's column entitled "Spring will soon be here again ——." From a Texas dealer—"Now I'm a small dealer. I buy in the homes. I love to meet the people and go back to visit — even when they have no more to sell. They are my friends. They know who I am and why I am buying. But, I guess there are 50 other people in this territory doing the same things. But this is America! The homes belong to other people. Anybody has the same right to go buy from them—and it is my hard luck if they beat me to it. Now the license is very small but in most cases it's the overhead that costs. "The —— Shop" is in my home. But I'm not a poor loser—if they beat me to it, I take it on the chin." From an Ohio dealer—"Well, one really should know the dealer before forming an opinion. However, reading between the lines, which isn't always the correct answer, it seems in this case a matter of "sour grapes"—an attitude too many dealers attain! After all, it is a free country; one surely can dispose of their personal belongings when, how and where one pleases; one is not forced to sell and a dealer is not forced to buy if the picker's price is too high. So, I cannot see where anyone has a right to question or criticize the farmer for trading for a subscription (or anything else he choses); or to voice one bit of protest against the subscription agent who is lucky enough to obtain the wanted things. The farmers are disposing of their treasures of their own free will—probably without "high-pressure" and who in this land of the free and the brave has a right to question the transaction? Just why should they have to sell direct to a dealer? And we all know dealers who offer pitifully small amounts for real treasures, and if they get them, brag about their "killing". Perhaps that is why this person cannot get them. If dealers want the better things, they have to realize that the old days when they could literally steal valuable, lovely things from people have passed. All of the magazines are full of stories about the old treasures, and there are many more shops than formerly. Too, there usually is at least one member of a family who has some idea of the value of things. (Of course, we have all met those whose idea of value is surely exaggerated!). So with the wide publicity given antiques and their desirability, dealers must realize that the owner today has a fair idea of their value. Perhaps this dealer has been trying to buy $25 items for 25¢, and the subscription agent is offering nearer their true value, and for that reason getting them where the dealer is losing them. His days of "riding the gravy train" are over and he is peeved about it. I saw this same comment in another magazine ("Spring is here ——") and was amazed to learn that there exist people with such selfish motives. Would he (that writer) like it if some screwball passed a law that people were permitted only to buy direct from the source of antiques? In other words, do away with the shop? His suggestion is just as illogical and crazy and selfish! My attitude is, always has been and I trust always shall be: "To the victor belongs the spoils, and may the best man win!"

So, we have it—the above comments are representative of 90% of the total received, and the most admirable trait of them all, we think is the display of sentiment, toward our Democratic form of government. It does one good to observe that Americans as a whole know what it is, what it does, and appreciates it for what it is worth. We heartily approve of this reaction.

It is disheartening to know that some feel THE SPINNING WHEEL is solely a dealer's magazine. This has been evidenced of late by those wishing to advertise. Upon being asked for references prior to their ad copy being accepted for publication, they reply that they are not dealers, just wish to sell some of their private collection or wish to add to their collection, and it is too much bother to submit the requested references. Fortunately this is a minor group, but we dislike this misconception of the magazine's purpose. THE SPINNING WHEEL is as much, if not more so, intended to supply the educational as well as physical needs of the collector as well as those of the dealer. The request for a prospective advertiser's character, credit, and business references should have nothing to do with their commercial status from the standpoint of being a dealer. The purpose is that this magazine's publishers be assured, to the best of their ability, that the advertiser will conform to the policies set forth by them in their buying and selling methods. Some complain that the ad they wish to place is so small that it seems ridiculous to go to all the trouble of investigating references on them. We have known as unfortunate a circumstance to evolve from a two line "wanted to buy" advertisement, as could ever be wrought from a full page advertisement. It is the full intention of the publishers to keep THE SPINNING WHEEL free of fraud in any fashion, and also free of discourteous advertisers who will not fulfill normal business requirements. Our method of investigating references although a friendly one, with no reflection on those being investigated, is a conclusive one — and one that decides the fate of the prospective advertiser. Undoubtedly, the references submitted are occasionally "fixed"; however, due to the strong backing of our readers, an advertiser with mis-intent is short-lived in THE SPINNING WHEEL. It should be clearly understood that anyone may

And back we are again (after refraining since the November issue) to the editorial concepts of another publisher. We leaf through the magazine in question until the publisher's monthly comment is reached and are rather shocked at the most unfashionable display of "biting the hand that feeds you". Near the front of the book is a full page advertisement (one of many used consistently by the advertiser) and later on in the comment section, the same advertiser, in almost a full page of text, is "torn to bits" piece by piece by the publisher whose monthly page is supported by him (the advertiser). The publisher seems not in the least hesitant about naming places as well as specific persons and is no more reluctant in his choice of derogatory expressions concerning the accused. Our opening this subject is by no means to be interpreted as a personal reason to protect the accused, but rather to wonder publicly, and not a little dazedly, why a publisher would "throw his readers to the wolves" by presenting advertising matter of one whose business ethics he so unguardedly protests against. If this man's ethics were so subversive, we would not hesitate to warn our readers either, but, we would feel ourselves equally corrupt if at the same time of that warning, an advertisement from the party in question appeared elsewhere in our magazine. Any intelligent advertiser of the aforementioned publication, will feel some uneasiness when ordering advertising space in the future, lest they be the next victim. Intelligent readers will also observe the "play on words" used by this publisher, with reference to his philanthropic efforts. To our knowledge "should" and "will" have two separate and distinct meanings. Instances such as the one above are most important to the future of the antiques business in general—and we feel it only fair to bring such matters to our readers attention for their disposition—and it is only through them (collectors and dealers everywhere) that such ridiculous and radical expositions can be crushed. We vehemently dislike anything pertaining to communism, even hate to darken these pages with the printed word, but could not one of its dictionary meanings, "negation of individual rights", be applicable to this case?

We have an apology to make at this time to our many correspondents, and authors who have submitted so many fine texts for future presentation in manner, with a smile of friendly wishes on the countenance, the ladies might urge their brief appeal to the best feeling of human nature, and thus rouse the minds of men to their greatest and noblest aspirations. Perhaps, however, it might be urged that our sex are not yet qualified to act the part of social mentors. We hope the influence of the Lady's Book will do something toward fitting them for this high station. Improvement is our motto, for the work and readers—and we trust to show how much can be effected in the coming year."

I wonder if it is from this very book that the custom was adopted here in Maryland for men to call on New Year's day. Some people think it is bad luck to have a lady enter your house as the first caller on New Year's day.

I leaf through the pages. There is a sketch, "Galileo's Dream", translated from the German of Engel. This certainly was intended to improve grandmother's mind for it is a beautiful piece of writing. However, there are nine short stories meant, I am sure, only for entertainment. In these stories the good are very good and the bad very bad; the ladies swoon at the drop of a hat and doctors know only bleeding for all ills.

Next, "Fashions for the Ball Room" (A tinted engraving) and here is a "Description of the Fashion Plate".

"Fig. 1. Ball dress of pink Grod de Naples, the corsage very low in the neck, tight to the bust, and finished to a point, with lace and stomacher of the same. The sleeves very short and puffed, with a bouillon at bottom. Skirt ornamented with rows of pearls, two at each side of the front, and between them small bows and tassels. Head dressed with roses, and a Bird of Paradise. Gold feronniere, white kid gloves,, the top trimmed with lace; white satin shoes.

Fig. 2. Low dress of straw color Poux de Soie, shot with white, short sleeves finished by two puffings. Lace cap with deep falls over the shoulders. Cap trimmed with lace, and pink ribbon. Hair in smooth bands; long black silk mittens. Lace ruffles, and black satin shoes."

Fig. 3. Dress of Pink satin. The corsage of this dress it will be perceived, is wholly of a new cut, and very much the style of a corset. It fits the shape as tightly as it is possible, has a long point, and three seams in front; the corsage is a heart shape, sloping downward from the shoulders, both at back and front; the sleeves are tight and plain, and very short, and present a new feature, that of being without straps; they are trimmed with quillings of satin ribbon, and a small bouquet of three feathers, each in front of the arm. The skirt of the dress is ornamented with two rows of these same bouquets of feathers placed alternately, and a similar branch is to be seen in the front corsage. The hair is in Bandeaux, a little frizzled inside, and the back coiled in thick rouleaux like cables (see plate) two branches of pink acacia droop at each side of the face. White kid gloves, the tip trimmed with a puffing of ribbons, the long ends floating. White shoes.

Fig. 4. Dress of figured gauze over satin. The corsage low; sleeves very short and perfectly plain and tight; the skirt has two deep tucks, ornamented at distances with bows of ribbon, a third row of bows is placed above the upper tuck, and a fourth row of very small ones around top of the skirt, a short distance below the waist. Hair in bands, part of back hair forms a braid, and remainder is in ringlets falling at each side of the neck; a puffing of geranium color ribbon is intermixed with the back hair, and a rosette bow of the same is placed immediately below the left ear. Festoons of pearls depending from the braid at back, fall over the front. (see plate) Bracelet on right arm; white kid gloves, with qualling of satin ribbon at top; white satin shoes."

The above is all anyone had to go by to make fashionable clothes and this, in the day even before sewing machines. What a woman, what an artist a dressmaker of 1842 had to be!

February 1842
Godey's Lady's Book

I look at the fashion plate in this issue of the magazine, then turn to read about it. "Our Fashions", the description is headed, and continues, "are so simply beautiful, that it would be impugning the knowledge of our fair readers, were we to attempt a description. In point of colouring and engraving, it certainly may be termed 'the guide plate'". If grandmother could make clothes like those with only that to go by, I for one take off my hat to her, swoons and all. She was a clever lady.

"Editor's Table" Feb. 1842.. "In this month the old Romans celebrate their festival in honor of the dead—it was called Feralia or Februa, hence the name February was derived.

"The fashion of wearing thin-soled shoes is such a besetting sin among our females, of all ages and classes, that it is no wonder consumption should be the prevalent disease in our land. No doubt may a fair young girl, many an amiable and beloved matron will, during the present month, lay the foundation for this disease in their constitutions. If we had the gift of perceiving things in their true relations and influence, should we not often see that grim spectre Death, marshalling the way from the heated rooms of the gay party, or crowded ball, and smiling as he watched his poor victims shrink, in their thin array, from the piercing blast of this month of the dead?

Few are sufficiently careful about wearing thick shoes, or Inda-rubbers, when going abroad at this season. If the sidewalks are free from snow and ice, the temptation to show a pretty foot seems irresistible; and we see delicate beings promenading the damp, cold pavement, with the same thin slippers, as neat, if not quite as small, as Cinderella's which they had been wearing in their carpeted parlors. True, the poets tell us that—

THE SPINNING WHEEL. Due to a change in some personnel, necessary to cope with our rapid expansion program, it has been impossible to answer correspondence as fully and promptly, or acknowledge author's manuscripts as readily as we have in the past. Within the next month, it is expected that the wheels of motion will be oiled to the extent of having all incoming correspondence answered within forty-eight hours. Capable staff members will be "on duty" to answer any and all inquiries and to assist advertisers with their advertising programs and schedules. The cooperation and patience of our readers has been greatly appreciated and you are asked to bear with us only a short while longer. You can rest assured that whatever your problem may be, it will be given careful attention and eventual reply from our offices. In the future, due to the volume of subscription orders received by us daily, new subscribers should allow at least thirty days for acknowledgment and receipt of their subscriptions.

AND our thought for this month (credited to Charles A. Bennett) is: "Man cannot be satisfied with mere success. He is concerned with the terms upon which success comes to him. And very often the terms seem more important than the success."

'There is a sweetness in woman's decay
When the light of beauty is fading away,
When the bright enchantment of health is gone,
And the tint that glowed, and the eyes that shone,
And darted around its glance of power,
And lip that vied with the sweetest flower,
That ever in Paestum's garden grew,
or ever steeped in morning dew,
When all that was bright and fair is fled,
But the loveliness lingering around the dead.'

"Poetry may weave its spell around her dying bed, and give the immortal dirge to her memory. But what atonement does all this sentiment make or the triumph of disease? And though the child of romance may imagine much of interest in the airy form and delicate features of the young victim of consumption, the philanthropist would, if possible, avert the cause of such early dissolution. Perhaps the question, whether a warm cloak and overshoes should be laid aside in a short walk today, decided in the affirmative, because it is troublesome to be so wrapped up, and one cannot be seen to advantage under such an array, will seal the early death of some fair young being, and carry sorrow and desolation into some happy household. We say then to the bright votary of fashion, 'Lady' wrap thy cloak around, Pale consumption's in the sky."

Poor grandmother, if she could see us out on Winter days not only in thin shoes but with both our toes and heels out. I thank Providence that we know about germs today.

Further, in addition to other marks, each piece was signed with the initials of the artist who did the decorating. This is of general interest, but particularly so to the collector who values the work of certain artists of note. It is a great joy, for instance, to know that the vase shown in the illustration was decorated by one of Rookwood's most famous artists, the Japanese, Mr. Ketaro Shirayamadani.

The beginning Rookwood collector can form his collection secure in the knowledge that his taste for it will provide him not only with endless hours of enjoyment but also with a good sound investment if he buys with judgment.

ican Antiquarian Society, Worcester, Mass. His endeavors, more than forty years of work, resulted in the largest Historical Newspaper collection extant in the United States and owned by the American Antiquarian Society. This collection was started by Isaiah Thomas, founder of the Society in 1812, and patriot printer of the Revolution. Continued by the Antiquarian Society it now has 1496 titles. Duplicates from this collection, more than 45,000 items, have been acquired recently by the Stanford University Library, and were added to the Elmer E. Robinson and other sources collection of Stanford, with Nathan Van Pattan, library director in charge.

Second largest Historical Newspaper Collection in the United States is kept at the Library of Congress, Washington, D. C., having 936 titles, third is that of Harvard with 732 titles.

Clarence Saunders Brigham compiled and wrote the History and Bibliography of American Newspapers, — published in two volumes, 1508 pages, by the American Antiquarian Society in 1947,—in which he listed all the newspapers published in this country from 1690 to 1813. To achieve this monumental work which he started in 1913, he had traveled thousands of miles, visited approximately 400 cities and towns, locating 2120 papers, and registering 194 newspapers known to have been in existence but of which not a single copy can be found. Of the total 2120 only two are being published today,—the Newport, R. I. News, and the Portsmouth, N. H. Gazette.

To locate and identify rare and missing specimens is left to our collectors of Historical Newspapers, true guardians of this fountain of history.
